Young Mountain Climber Falls To His Death

MOOSE, Wyo. (AP) - A young mountain climber fell to his death yesterday just short of the rocky summit of 13,766-foot Grand Teton Peak.

The youth, 20-year-old Joseph Kubler Jr., of Easton, Pa., son of a vice president of the Dixie Cup Corp., was with two other climbers.

Chief Ranger Ernest Field of the Grand Teton National Park said a 15-man park service rescue team was expected to return with the body late tonight. The peak, still covered with patches of snow, is a favorite among mountain climbers. The chief ranger said Kubler was leading the expedition. He apparently slipped on rocks about 400 feet from the summit and fell 60-80 feet, almost at the feet of his companions who weretrailing on the steep face of the

DEPOT AT BLUE RIDGE SUMMIT TO BE LIBRARY

The historic Blue Ridge Summit passenger station is being given to the people of the Blue Ridge area for use as a free public library, it was announced today by W. Arthur Grotz, president of the Western Maryland Railway Company. The gift includes the station building and its plaza, comprising an acre and a half of land.

Western Maryland acquired the property in 1897 from the Carey family, one of the early Baltimore summer Blue Ridge residents, Mr. Grotz said.

Will Preserve Station

Mrs. Robert Hearne, president of the board of the Blue Ridge Summit Free Library, said the committee intends to preserve the station in its original form so as to maintain the scenic appearance of the community. Others on the board are J. Harvey Gearhart, Mrs. Joseph E. Dailey, Miss Marea Harris, Mrs Jack Kramer, Miss there are two summer members of the board, Miss Ethel Wedge and Miss Martha Connor.

The station was the western terminus of the famous Blue Mountain Express. one of the finest trains of its day. This "de luxe" express and other trains combined to carry more than a million passengers a year on the Western Maryland around the turn of the century. AMOS, CRUSADER FOR RIGHTEOUSNESS

Amos 1:1; 6:4-7; 7:10-15 Key Verse: Seek good, and not evil, that you may live. Amos 5:14 The rugged, stern prophet of Tekoa was the champion of social justice who lived and denounced evil about 750 B.C. - the first of a long line of prophets who did more for the survival of God's chosen people than their numerous kings and generals. Amos did not mince words when he was called by God to speak to Israel. In biting warnings he uncovered Israel's sins, striking at the nation's over-confidence, its unshared prosperity, its decaying religion

its immorality God took this untutored shepherd from his flocks in Tekoa and sent him to the capital of Israel where King Jeroboam lived in luxury and the idolatrous priest Amaziah pretion to which Amos spoke has many parallels in our modern world and his message is as fresh and pertinent today as in the time of Old Testament revolt against the true God. Amos was entirely fearless because he knew he was God's spokesman. He admitted freely to Amaziah, "I am no prophet, nor a prophet's son; but I am a herdsman, and a dresser of sycamore trees

No Formal Training

What background of training and experience did Amos have for this important task? No formal training certainly, but a keen observer of people and social and religious conditions. His thoughts in the hills of Tekoa must have been centered on the abuses of religion and how the reigning kings were using the nation's wealth. Besides he had traded sheep in the markets of Bethel and saw the great wealth poverty of the masses. The same conditions exist in the Middle East he resembles Peter in the New Testament - both had out-of-door work, were completely fearless and committed to God, and were The name Amos means "burden bearer" and it seems that this was the role in which the Lord cast him - to risk his life in sounding forth the warnings of God. So the prophet of Judah followed in the line of Hebrew reformers and carried out God's specific instructions. His message, although short had more influence than that of his predecessors. It gave a new conception of the relationship between religion and ethics. "More specifically he proclaimed for the first time in the history of religions that the observance of a ritual is in itself of no significance whatever, unless it be the expression of the worshiper's dedication to-moral integrity and respect for the social needs of the community as a whole

"Class Distinctions"

The sociological evolution of the Israelites, from the nomadic life of the wilderness to the more sedentary, agricultural, and com mercial form of society established in Canaan, produced economic inequalities and class distinctions. It was these things that gave Amo the courage to champion the weak and oppressed and accuse the sins of commission. When he cried But let justice roll down like ever-flowing stream." he was striking at the indulgence, the selfishness, and oppression which were threatening Israel with collapse

When Amos cried, "I hate, I despise your feasts" and "Take away from me the noise of your songs." he was attacking the formal religion in which the people accepted God as a benevolent partner and failed to realize He is also Judge. The prophet con demned the rich matrons of Israel scorned the barons of finance by saying "you trample upon the poor," and said coldly to the priest at Bethel. "Your wife shall be harlot." This took courage for foreigner who was a mere herds man! It irked Amos to see the poor go hungry while the rich revelers anointed themselves with costly oil, ate "lambs from the flock," and drank wine in the bowls reserved for sacrifices

Exposing the evils of Israel was the gist of his three great discourses, but Amos closed with a words, "I will restore the fortunes of my people Israel."
